Backstory: Bia and Moa's parents were both peasant farmers, they were childhood sweethearts who got married and had two daughters in quick succession. Tragically, their mother died during the birth of their second daughter. Esa Elin was shaken by the loss of his wife and subconsciously never forgave Moa for causing her death. Although Bia was sly and made trouble for others often, Moa was more gregarious, giving Esa more than enough opportunities to punish her for perceived offenses while he ignored her sister's quiet exploits. Although he supports both of his daughters as best he can, everyone in town knows he has a soft spot for Bia in particular, as she continues being a bit difficult to this day, although he refuses to see it.

Being the clear least favorite of her father and antagonistic with her sister, Moa learned quickly to seek connection elsewhere. She's well-liked by both the older and younger generations of the town for being both hardworking and sociable, and always makes an appearance at the food stalls at night to chat with her girlfriends.
