Lord Namara served a military campaign as a youth, and always wanted his son to do the same, but his sensitive, bookish, unathletic son showed no aptitude towards military service, so at Lady Namara's insistence he compromised and let the boy go to temple school instead. In his 14 years away from home, Young Namara learned history, government, magical theory, and science. He thinks he wants to apply his education to create inventions that will make his family's business faster and easier.

Young Namara and Lani Choe overlapped at magic school and bonded over being Saavi (Lady Namara is from Ba Hamavi.) Lani comes here partially to visit him.
